

Ladies and gentlemen;

Judging from the title of the lecture to which we are about to listen, Cain, Herod and Co. we are doomed to spend the evening in rather questionable society. But if any living man is able to guide us safely through such a dangerous crowd, surely it is he who for years has lived, observed and pondered in that part of the country where they raise Cain (in either sense of the word)

as one of the staple productions; and when the "slaughter of innocents" is not a mere figure of speech.

It is the man who not many years ago took us all down south on A Fool's Errand, kept us there working at Bricks Without Straw, fed us meanwhile with Figs and Thistles, naturally followed by Eax - not down - ack ashes but John Eax - and who then led us back along a highway paved with Hot Plow.

shows, to seat us on an imperial throne and plead before us An Appeal to Caesar,

This writer of more than Continental fame,
this uncookable migma of soldier, jurist, statesman, journalist, author and lecturer it is now my pleasing duty to introduce to a Kenian audience as the speaker of the evening
