

Philada., January 10th, 1891.

My dear Madam :--

Your letter reached me yesterday evening, and the book of which you spoke arrived this morning. Of course, I have not yet had time to read it, but shall do so at the earliest convenience, and if I can do anything to forward its publication, will assuredly not fail to do so. Judging from the title, it ought to capture the consideration of the public, for it promises to touch upon a theme that fills current thought.

With many kind regards, I remain

Very truly yours,

The Manse, 3700 Chestnut St.
