Literary Note.

Buffalo Tidings states that "Murvale Eastman," the hero of Tourgee's new novel, is modelled upon a young Episcopal minister of that city, the Rev. Henry A. Adams. Judge Tourgee says that from what he has heard of Mr. Day, that might be true, but as he does not personally know the gentleman he did not have him in mind. It is refreshing, however to learn that such manly characters do exist; the more of them, the better!

George Cary Eggleston and Dolores Marbourg have written in collaboration a novel entitled "Juggernaut: A Veiled Record." It is an intensely dramatic story of American political, financial, and social life, depicting the dangers of success and the destructive effect of ambition; peculiarly a tale for the times.

The sense of it is that it is a stupid blunder, solely chargeable to J.P.M. Instead of writing
"Mr Adams" I suppose I meant Halbert & Co. something about "Day" (Mr. Chief Manager) & simply wrote that instead. Moreover, I saw it in the proof, but,
my interrupted while reading it, sent the slip back without correcting it.

So rarely do I accomplish such a perfect piece of idiom, that it is worth while to tell the whole story.
