PUBLISHERS,
No. 80, Lafayette Place.

NEW YORK, March 21 1891

Dear Judge

I find nothing of interest here to send you, & no letters. So I enclose the check from Mr. Wheeler the amt I believe was $50
& Expenses, and one that that $25 is probably covers the latter item so that the chk is for $75. The Shanks dont show in the ck
but they're there all the same.

It is too bad that
that howev' bad weather will prevent my seeing Madame Selle this time; but I shall hope for a more favorable

Chance, when we are at home & not 'in the trap'
 so we are this winter
 With kind regards to both your lady & yourself
 Your faithful
 J. W.
 Don't forget the little shop
 of Contracts.

MIDNIGHT TALKS AT THE CLUB.

16mo. Bound in Vellum Cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

"A very striking and suggestive little book, full of wisdom and thoughtfulness, and a serene insight into the deeper things of life. . . . The several disputants are well chosen and the subjects of debate are full of interest."—Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.

CONTRASTED VIEWS.

"The views expressed in the book are those now commonly held by scientific men and historical critics, but they have not until recently been expressed in this country with such freedom and emphasis. . . . He has but little to say as to the positive side of religion, except that he believes in the being of God and the immortality of the soul."—Science, N. Y.

"What poses as literature becomes really rationalistic propagandism. . . . There is much of doubt as to a divine personality and even a future life for man. . . . How little of an apology it is for scattering firebrands, arrows and death, to plead 'Am I not in sport?'"—The Standard, Chicago.

"The author proclaims his belief in God, immortality and the Gospel of Jesus Christ, 'the Great Teacher who rose upon the world from the Galilean hamlet, and in golden words set the point of departure for a new religion of humanity.' Mr. Fiske's own views are put forth modestly, even tentatively, and the generosity with which he treats those who may be supposed to differ with him invites similar treatment from his readers."—Newark Advertiser.

"Taken as a standard of the average incapacity to deal with great questions of the day, they are valuable. They show just what the results of desultory reading and loose thinking are."—The Churchman (Episcopal), N. Y.

"Full of clear thought, and will bring comfort to many who have been dazed by the light of scientific research and know not what path they are treading."—Buffalo Courier.

"A reprint of a series of papers contributed to the New York Times. . . . suggestive and stimulating."—Boston Globe.

"Not uninteresting, but conventional even in their pretence of radicalism. . . . Timidity, rather than freedom of research, seems indicated by the prevailing tone."—New York Tribune.

"Noted for vigorous thinking and bold utterances. . . . Stimulate better thinking. . . . The sharp questionings of an earnest mind."—San Francisco Bulletin.

"Straightforward, manly, liberal."—New York Mail and Express.

"Garrulous, flippant, irreverent, and superficial. . . . Owl-like discussions. . . . Theological demoralization, social and religious chaos, if not, indeed, something worse."—Evening Telegraph, Philadelphia.

"Touches matters of living and enduring interest upon which people are thinking and craving something fresh in the thoughts of others. The publication of this newspaper series in book form was a happy thought, as all into whose hands the little volume may come will agree."—Detroit Commercial Advertiser.

"Keen insight, clear discernment, strong convictions, and distinct individuality of thought. He has the happy faculty of looking at things from various sides, and of making the subject disclose that it has different sides, all worthy of consideration. . . . Attractive to those who wish to be nourished through their intelligence rather than through their prejudices. . . . Frankness, sincerity, and real reverence for the truth, which have a tonic quality. . . . Thoughtful people will find much in this volume to repay careful, quiet reading, and to all such we commend it."—The Christian Union, N. Y.

MIDNIGHT TALKS AT THE CLUB.

REPORTED BY AMOS K. FISKE.

CONTENTS:—"The Owl Party," Temperance; The Shepherdless Sheep; Sunday Observance; Religion; Political Immorality; Superstition and Worship; The Scriptures as a Fetish; Irish-Americans; Moses and the Prophets; Ancient Scriptures; Value of Human Evidence; Power of Personality; Discussions Applied; Usefulness of Delusion; The Faith Defended; Toleration and Enlightenment; Comfort in Essential Truths.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

"Clean, clear, and helpful."—Public Opinion, Washington, D. C.

"A delightful book. . . . Covering a multitude of subjects with a kindly light of wit and wisdom."—JNO. BOYLE O'REILLY, Boston.

"The opinions are those of a broad-minded, earnest man of to-day, an optimist of the better sort, and they are written in crisp and cogent style."—Providence Journal.

"Nearly every question which has attracted general attention in recent years has received a careful and unbiased examination in these papers. . . . Will be widely read."—The Press, N. Y.

"Suggestive and stimulating."—The Globe, Boston.

"Unpretentious and chatty from beginning to end, the book is, nevertheless, full of strong views regarding the greatest problems of life, and the conclusions are practically those of the wiser and more hopeful men in law, morals, and religion to-day."—New York Herald.

"The 'Owl-party' of four who do most of the talking, are a bright and brainy quartette."—Buffalo Express.

"Broad in view, optimistic in spirit, and exceedingly clever generally. . . . Read with pleasure and laid aside with regret when the last page is reached."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

"Healthful, with humor and seriousness most happily blended for the making of a book that is at once pleasant and wise."—Evening Bulletin, Philadelphia.

"Often times eloquent and at all times sincere, even when the playful humor lies beaming on the surface, it is a book that will carry light and consolation to many doubting minds."—New York Times.

"Although the subjects are not new, yet there is a freshness about their treatment which gives an impression of novelty, and one feels the inspiration of a certain breadth and liberality of thought which is uncommon in discussions of this sort."—Boston Post.

"This candor of mind, and a certain sweetness of temper, are very alluring to the reader, who, whether he finds his own pet beliefs confirmed or gently taken apart and their incongruities made clear, will enjoy every step of the process."—Brooklyn Times.

"A unique little volume. . . . There is probably no time at which a man who enjoys controversial friction is brighter than in the freedom of the club room."—Kansas City Times.

"Full of suggestion to the thoughtful. . . . There is much humor in these talks, and we can cordially commend the book to any one who is interested in subjects of living interest."—San Francisco Chronicle.

"The political and sociological papers are clever and sensible, and all of the 'Talks' are so bright and energetic, that this book may well be expected to take the place of the usual summer theological novel to furnish piazza-chat for the summer hotels and deck-talk for the ocean steamers."—Boston Herald.
