Dr Sir I sent you a few days ago a parcel by mail and as you did not know where it came from I thought it were well to ease your mind in regard to that I refer to a part of the Sunday World which contained one of the latest of Mr Herbert Spencer's contributions to the mass of literature of the day on the social problem. you cannot fail to see that it leaves no doubt in the readers mind as to what he considers absolutely necessary in order to bring about right conditions in society. you will also see that his views are diametrically opposed to the views held by a large body of men who are sincere and earnest in their effort to reform society and towards which you seem to have a slight leaning. Believing as I do that you are a man of influence in the literary world I therefore hope that in entering the field of economic discussion you will consider well and make the right start. I will also say that many of your friends hope that you will remain in that field

Respectly
