A. W. Touzre, Esq.,

Dear Sir:-

You will excuse a few lines from one who feels indebted to you. I have just finished reading "Murvale Eastman, Christian Scientist," which I borrowed from my father. I want to convey to you my hearty thanks for the blessing your book did me. It was a means of grace to my soul. I finished the book at 1:20 a.m., so you can judge of my interest in your presentation of the social problem. As I read on my head was unconsciously keeping time with "Ezekiel Townley's" in nodding to the sentiments expressed

And my heart was continually saying "Amen." And it seemed as if my faith in Christ and the divinity and benevolence of his mission was never so bright and glowing.

For years in my study of the Bible - in preparation for a Bible class teacher and reporter in the Methodist church - I have been troubled with the thought that the church had not only lost her grip on the masses, but had to a large extent lost her grip on Almighty God because she had drifted away from the simplicity and practicalness of the teaching of Christ. It seems to me your book will help her regain her lost power.

I shall recommend its reading to all whom I can influence, and will endeavor to procure a copy for circulation in my class of young people.

You have no doubt received praises and thanks from the great and powerful for your works, and probably this note from one in the humbler walks of life may not be amiss. I sincerely pray that the Father of us all may bless you and the cause you have here advocated. Again accept my heartfelt thanks.

Yours Sincerely
