From the Arena. Oct. 1895.

The Arena is the leading magazine advocate of political and social reform in the world. Its October ^{number}, under the head of "The World of Books" contains a four page notice, signed by its editor, Mr. B.O. Flervoer, which begins with -

"One of the most important works on finance I have read is 'The Key-Note: Substitute Honest Money for Fictitious Credit,' by Albert Griffin.  It is a calm, closely reasoned, convincing work. The author has made clear many facts which the gold ring and the usurer class are exceedingly anxious to keep from the people." And it ends with, "Mr. Griffin is known as a lifelong Republican. He had been a ^{leader} in the councils of the party before it grovelled at the feet of England's money changers and the usurer class of America.

His work, as before observed, is one of the ablest if not the ablest, discussion of the money question I have read in years, and it should be in the hands of every patriot of America.
