"How far that little candle throws his beams!"
—Merchant of Venice, Act 5, Sc. 1.

A candle burning bright.
A graceful figure floating by.
A shadow on the wall.

* * * * *

Yet women everywhere wait finger-on-lip in breathless eagerness to note each new flowing line and varying curve in the tracery of its contour.

* * * * *

For Paris holds the burning candle high, and the figure gowned in grace slips forth from Fashion's throne-room, and the shadow—the silhouette of the season—falls across the world!
