

The Press.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Press is endeavoring to increase its collection of photographs of men and women of distinction. We find that we have no suitable picture of you, and would consider it a mark of your confidence and esteem if you would send us one at your earliest convenience, directing it to "The Library of the Press, Philadelphia." We should also be very glad to receive any biographical data.

We wish especially to emphasize the fact that in replying to this application you will be subjected to no future annoyance in the shape of requests to contribute toward expenses of a volume, or purchase copies of the paper. We are compiling no volume, running no series, only trying to make a daily newspaper as good as it can be made, and consider ourselves the debtors of those by whose courtesy we are enabled to keep our reference department up to date.

Hoping that this courtesy may be extended to us in your case, we are

Very truly yours,

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS.
