Cherlin, Ohio,
March 15, 1888.

My dear:

I read your letter this morning. Do not be troubled. I had no idea of blaming you. I counted the Sioux City matter as at best only a mistake. I am sure it was not even that — on your part at least. On the other you should have said to Clayton "Your engagement may not stand; mine must. You had no right to fix a date without my consent."

That is where he stands — But don't be troubled, dear. I have no inclination to blame. Will be home tomorrow at five o'clock. Am as glad you are better.

Yours.
