HOTEL LAFAYETTE,

L. U. MALTBY.

PHILADELPHIA.

January 16, 1889

Dear Mr. Tourgée:

I am here for the day, and will look in on you before I return. If you have any special plans that I could adapt my movements to, you might let me know here — though until after lunch I shall probably be engaged with Mr. Barrie.

I got Col. Norton, before he went to Florida, to give me his recollection about the "Too True" stories, and you will find his notes of the authors' names in the index of the dummy sent with this.

I am a little puzzled by his indication of "A Hard Lesson" as E. P. Roe's story (the only one I have immediate interest in) — because of the amount of profanity in it.

I wonder if a glance at the stories would refresh your memory?

You see what endless annoyance people involve themselves in, when they do good natured things!

Faithfully Yours,

H. W. D. H.
