

March 3d.

Dear Judge:

I am relieved of considerable anxiety by your kind letter of the 1st. The article, after your additions and changes in the proof, offered many opportunities for printers' errors. I did not dare to have corrections undertaken in the type, but had the entire essay set anew; and as time did not permit a revise being sent to you, I went over one myself with great care three times.

I thank you for proposing the article on The Power of Congress to protect the Voter. I am not in a situation to act in regard to that at once, because I am pressed very hard by several long articles that are already in type. I will put the subject on my note book, and wait for an opening. Probably I shall be obliged to publish a reply to "The Right to vote," and if I can, I will see that it comes from an able and prominent man.

Yours very truly,

R. S. Metcalf.
