

Bay City, Mich., ~~May 6 1892~~

Hon. Albion W. Tourgis, Mayville, New York.

Dear Sir:

I beg leave to ask you, whether or not the President of the United States, has the power to stop those outrages in the South? Mr. Ingersoll says he has. The colored men of Michigan are becoming very undecided in the feeling towards the matter. I have always been a staunch republican; to day I feel so riled up over the matter that I hardly know where I stand.
If it had not have been for the colored voters of the North, Benjamin Harrison would not be in the chair to day. I did all I could to elect him, and if I find that he has not done his duty, and he is nominated again I will do all I can to defeat him.

HOPEING THIS WILL MEET YOUR APPROVAL
I remain,

Yours Respectfully,

Walker Carter,

Bay City,

Mich.

The President could not stop the outrages: but if he had sent half as many messages about them to Congress as Grover Cleveland did to ~~benefit~~ the men who fought while he shirked they would have been stopped on the country as aroused that their end would have been as certain as sunrise a lot
