

this method of ascertaining who are for and who are against the principles of the Association.

With the warmest wishes for your success I remain

Yours very truly
William W. Lougheed

all upon the sovereign character of the states but solely upon the fact that such power was granted to them by "the people of the United States" ^{and by whose authority} in whose name, the Constitution was "ordained".

Of course, whatever power or authority the people of the United States, might give ^{confer upon} to the legislature or people of any state, ~~that power~~ by the Constitution, that same power the people of the United States had a right, in the same manner to take away from them. And this very thing they at once proceeded to do, by declaring, in the most emphatic manner that "the Congress may