

Marchfield, Settle

25 May 1893 -

My dear Miss Sangie

I felt so much thanked to receive this morning the little papers generally directed by your kind mother & reach to-day in your handwriting still it was a satisfaction to know that she is still with you and I earnestly hope that she is stronger than when you wrote. I have to thank you for your very kind letters and will you express to the Judge called upon Miss Inupay & my gratitude for his Miss Ida Hill & it was a kind letter which has gave great pleasure this morning to see how naturally & pleasantly lay in Edinburgh & is to the last talked to the latter, to his own possession I do so earnestly hope and I know well that that no harder feelings he will appreciate it. towards the colored When we look him there race may surmise in a few weeks ago to settle his breast. He were all him on his entrance so sorry to hear of what to the University, he & I might have been such a terrible accident. As it is, it is sadly disappointing to feel that so much hard work has been lost, but when one thinks that the precious life is there still to do the work over again, the rest seems light. We look forward with great interest to the arrival of the new leaf, and I need hardly say to the prospect also of a possible visit from you in the autumn.

Our quiet country home
would be your resting place I hope from the fatigues of travelling & speaking.

My husband has for long been an object of care & anxiety that we are quite fitted to look after invalids, and it will be a special pleasure to us to make your husband as comfortable as possible.
I do hope that Miss Sturge will send all you desire.
She has a mistaken idea
to shrink from allowing her name to appear in connection with it. Misses have been so kind in helping her and that I think she needs all her success to their efforts, and I do so hope she will act reasonably now. Her

to make her take a hopeful or cheerful view of things.

We shall read the papers received to-day with great interest, please accept my warmest thanks for so kindly sending them.

Believe me, with our united kindest greetings.

Sincerely yours
Catherine Shepard
