To the Editor.

Will The Inter Oceanis

"Bystander" Tell one of his admiring readers how or why an overproduction of money (such as the monometalist say free silver would bring about), would not relieve or offset the trouble which The Bystander explains so intelligently as coming from an overproduction of all other labor products?

Inventive genius smote the rocks that contained the money metals just as it smote the rest of the earth to make it give forth in more abundance and with less effort. The necessaries and luxuries of human life. and would not the volume of money uninterrupted by the demonetization of either money metal in the natural order of things events or conditions have kept pace with the increase of all other products of toil and prevented the terrible discord that agitates the business of the country at the present time? Very truly yours
