Dear Sir:-

The Harvard Republican Club is planning to establish at Harvard University, during the five weeks preceding the election, a daily paper, for political purposes, to be called the "Harvard Citizen". It is proposed to distribute this paper free of charge among the students of the University, to induce them to take an interest in practical politics, and thus aid on the work of good government.

I believe that if it is possible for the paper to publish, a letter or chapter daily, the Letters to a King, copyrighted by you in 1887, they would have a good effect on the political views and opinions of the undergraduate body of the University. Upon what terms would you be willing to grant us permission to publish the Letters in this way, during the month of October? The publication in this form would sell many of the bound copies in Cambridge, would it not?

I should appreciate a speedy reply. Assuring you of my personal esteem,

I am, sincerely yours,

Harry B. Kirtland
